UTILIZING REDDIT FORUM DATA TO CONDUCT QUALITATIVE RESEARCH ON HIDDEN AND UNDER-EXPLORED POPULATIONS

Drawing from our ongoing research surrounding an under-researched racial minority group, we aim to demonstrate how online social forums, such as Reddit, present an opportunity for qualitative sociologists to uncover in-depth experiences from hidden populations. In our presentation, we will display Reddit as an effective, practical, and data-rich environment for qualitative inquiry. We will first detail the infrastructure of Reddit's online platform and application features, including (1) the existence of niche 'subreddit' communities and social enclaves, (2) Reddit's focus-group style discussion boards, and (3) the engagement-based visibility algorithm for data mining. Next, using common patterns and practices from published Reddit data, we will outline a four step process for effectively conducting qualitative research with 'ready-made' online forum data. Finally, using methods and data from our ongoing research study, we will visualize how this four-step model can be employed to uncover the experiences of a hidden population. Constraints and limitations of Reddit and forum data will be discussed.

SOCIOLOGY, SCIENCE FICTION, AND THE FUTURE

Organizer: Harry F. Dahms, University of Tennessee - Knoxville

For too long, sociology has confined itself to the past and the present, and the present in relation to and as the result of the past. We never could afford sociologists treating the future as an afterthought, as an area of study no serious scholar or researcher would touch. Yet, sociologists -- while frequently alluding to the future in mostly vague terms -- regarded refraining from addressing the future of modern societies, humankind, and planetary civilization as proof of scientific rigor. Today, and from here on out, sociologists must include the future in our considerations of the importance and potential contributions of the discipline, and recognize that pursuing and advancing social research and sociology -- especially in a critical register -- must involve projections of possible futures, along a spectrum from (likely) horror and apocalypse at one end, and (remote) possibility of an enjoyable life for all at the other, on a planet characterized by a reconciled relationship between (human) society and nature.

PLANETARY SOCIOLOGY

Organizer: Harry F. Dahms, University of Tennessee - Knoxville

Papers address how the emerging and problematic intricacies between an increasingly contradictory, complex, and contingent social world in the early 21st century corresponds in similar fashion with individual identities that are fraught with cognitive dissonance, growing violence, and a collapse of solidarity in relation to perpetual crises with regard to politics, economics, and the environment. In a context characterized by such features, sociology urgently must move from the national to the planetary level, and critically reevaluate the adequacy of conceiving of the present age in terms of "globalization."

REDISCOVERING THE SOCIAL JUSTICE ROOTS OF SOCIOLOGY (CO-SPONSORED BY THE COMMITTEE ON THE PROFESSIONS AND COMMITTEE ON RACIAL AND ETHNIC MINORITIES)

Organizer: Andrea Hunt, University of Alabama-Huntsville

Presider: Andrea Hunt, University of Alabama-Huntsville

Calls centering on the discipline's social justice roots have been around for decades. More recently, Romero's 2019 ASA presidential address and corresponding article in 2020 urged sociologists to reclaim sociology's social justice tradition. This panel is seeking participants who can provide guidance for deeper self-reflection in sociological practice, ideas for incorporating a social justice focus in the teaching of sociology, ways to center marginalized voices in the discipline, and examples of how to balance a teacher-scholar-activist identity.

USING ANTIRACIST WORK TO RECONSTRUCT REALITY IN ACADEMIA AND BEYOND: SPONSORED BY SOCIOLOGISTS FOR WOMEN IN SOCIETY – SOUTH (SWS-S)

Organizer: Baker A. Rogers, Georgia Southern University

Presider: Baker A. Rogers, Georgia Southern University

SWS-S leadership has spent 2021 exploring the roots of racism and prejudice within our organization and working towards becoming a more antiracist and diverse group within academia and beyond. To this end, we worked with Teddy McGlynn-Wright, a Belonging-Based Facilitator at In the Works (<http://intheworksllc.squarespace.com>), on a series of antiracist workshops. Additionally, as a leadership team, we participated in a book discussion on Ibram X. Kendi's book, How to Be an Antiracist. The goal of this panel is to share our experiences and what we have learned from this work, and hopefully to serve as a model for other organizations, such as MSSA, who may be interested in antiracist work.
